THE IMPRESSIONS OF A TENDERFOOT

Being Black-and-White Sketches of Real Human Interest.

ONE OF THE MOST INTERESTING MASONIC RELICS in the west or southwest, and probably in its line in the country, is an old Masonic apron that is now the property of a citizen of this city. Prominent Masons from all quarters of the world have examined it, and inasmuch as the story that attaches to it is one of surpassing interest, it attracts the attention of even those who are ignorant of the meaning of the symbols.

The original possessor of the apron was an officer on the staff of General George Washington, and served with him during the war of the revolution. During the terrible winter at Valley Forge, one of the beneficial diversions of the Continentals was a deep study of Masonry, and the lodge that had its being there is one of the strangest of which history tells. Many of the officers and men who had not before been members of the community then became members. One day a scouting party brought in a Tory, a man of considerable prominence, who had started to the enemy's line. He was respected even in the error of his political belief and during the winter was made a Mason. In the spring he was given his Masonic parole and went to England, remaining until after the great struggle was over. Immediately upon his arrival in England he had this apron woven at Nottingham, of the finest silk, and forwarded it to his friend the colonel, by courtesy of the English authorities reaching him in due course. After the war was over it was worn by its owner in the lodge of which George Washington was master, and at the institution of many lodges which are inseparably connected with the history of the order in this country.

After the death of the colonel it became the property of his son, who was a surgeon in the war of 1812, and from him passed to his son who carried it with him in the long march to the City of Mexico, when the United States force entered that capital. It was worn there in some of the remarkable gatherings that followed the capitulation, and the lower left hand corner was eaten off by camp rats on the return march.

Afterwards it was worn at the institution of Golden Gate lodge, at San Francisco, probably the most remarkable Masonic event that ever occurred in America, embracing nearly every nationality on earth, and being attended by many men who have since become great in the records of the times.

Afterwards it was worn at the conclave which was held at Atlanta when Sherman was on his way to the sea, when hostilities were suspended and the warring armies forgot for two days that there was a struggle at which the world shuddered in progress.

In its time the apron had been worn by such men as Lincoln, Owen Lovejoy, Logan, and the elder Harrison, and it is remembered by many of the Masons of high degree in all parts of the country, who have seen and know of its progress from father to son down through so many generations. Despite its age the relic is still in good preservation.

Following the English law, the name of the weaver and the recipient is woven in the cloth, the inscription still being legible a little to the right of the base of Pillar B. It is backed by a shield-cloth of pure linen, woven over a hundred years ago by the wife of the owner.

That is a long time since that old apron crossed the sea to the land where it was to be a treasure through all time. Kingdoms have fallen, risen and fallen again, republics have sprung up at the inspiration of oppressions and tyranny, the electric wings of the telegraph

GAVE UP SUPPORTER

"I wore a supporter for years, for my womb, which had crowded everything down before it, writes Mrs. S. J. Chrisman, of Mansville, N. Y. 'I suffered untold misery and could hardly walk. After taking Cardui I gave up my supporter and can now be on my feet half a day at a time.'" girdle the earth at will, the iron highway has penetrated the deepest fastnesses and peopled them, and the stars and stripes now float over a world power that has grown from that little ragged remnant freezing on the vale.

So might the lesson be drawn with infinity. Change has transformed all upon earth, save human nature and that wonderful fraternity which had its birth when the world was young, and which is now in the opening years of the twentieth century, stronger as an element higher citizenship than when the sons of Heram labored in the quarries of Lebanon.

HOW FRANCIS WILLARD LOVED—In some respects Francis Willard, the great temperance worker, is the most remarkable type of American womanhood. Inspired by a purpose in which she deeply believed, her whole glorious character was bound up in her mission, and she worked for it with a whole-hearted zeal that moved many to remark that it was her first and only love.

There is where they are mistaken—and where they are blind. Did you ever study Miss Willard's picture closely? If you ever did, and know anything about the real humanity, you see there the undefinable stamp that marks the borderland of the divine, that transforms the plainest face of the woman who loves, or who has loved and lost. When motherhood has opened the door of the heart, and life becomes in truth a long, sweet song, the look deepens, the rose is in full bloom, its subtlety gone, yet glorious in its very plainness to the eye.

Francis Willard loved, as only a woman of her powerful character can, and to her virgin heart came the blessing and the Gethsemane, that left upon her face a beauty that triumphed over years, and was felt by a multitude who could not understand how a woman could pass through the fire and have no scars.

I have heard the story often from my father and mother, bless the dear old souls back in the blizzards of the Illini. It was before the war, in a Chicago far different from the rushing, roaring, seething hell of people that is today. Over on the north side my people lived, on a street from which all signs of hearth-fires have disappeared in the shadows of the great wholesale houses. Then it was a street of homes, handy to the down-town district and undisturbed by the smell and noise of the river of today.

Standing then on the open thresh-hold of womanhood, Francis Willard was a full master in the confraternity of brains, and was drawn to the little house by the magnetism that draws upon only the finest steel. She came often after the day was over and the music of her laugh lasted for hours.

Then she fell in love with a member of the fraternity, a clever, bonny fellow, whom the world might call a never-do-well, but to her a perfect man, and her heart went out to him without reserve. Her people did not approve, and many and many an evening they passed in that little house on Lake street, happy to be near each other. Then came the call to arms, and the impulsive lover was among the first to join the blue, bidding his sweet-heart good-bye in my father's house when he went forth to the war.

He never came back. When he fell at Chicamauga, Francis Wil-

Willard gave no sign that the world might know, and only that modest little home knew the depth of her agony, all the greater because denied expression in the way of woman and the solvent of tears. Her secret was kept, and it was not until after death had removed the seal that it was told to me, and this is the first time it has ever been in print. Many come to woo, but Francis Willard was true to her troth and to her soldier boy sleeping beyond Chattanooga. Her whole life was given up to good, and the world never knew whence came that celestial light that shone forth from the fine womanly face, whose passing sent a wave of sorrow round the world.
